

Words of Appreciation

No one epitomizes exemplary mentoring and leadership more than Susan Hartmann. Rarely does one person combine excellence in all facets of our jobs, but Susan does. She is an amazingly committed and effective mentor and teacher, an internationally acclaimed scholar of women's history, and a veritable force within the university and the profession.

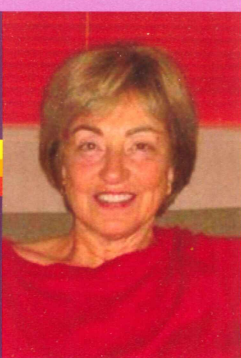

Leila J. Rupp, formerly Professor and Chair of the Department of History, The Ohio State University; currently Professor of Feminist Studies, University of California, Santa Barbara

I owe my professional career at OSU to Susan Hartmann. When I was on sabbatical from another institution, Susan offered me the opportunity to teach a graduate women's studies course. Although I was teaching this course as a visiting professor, Susan took the time to listen to me and mentor me. While working with Susan, I always respected her for her fairness and comfortable way of dealing with differences. She probably doesn't realize this, but she modeled for me how to do diversity and inclusion work. I am so very grateful for her friendship and leadership.

Valerie B. Lee, Professor of English, Vice Provost for Diversity and Inclusion, The Ohio State University

Susan Hartmann is a model of professionalism. She is a distinguished scholar, a dedicated teacher and mentor, and a bold leader with an impressive record of service. She always asks the hard questions of her students and colleagues, encouraging all of us to become better scholars and members of a collective intellectual community.

Judy Wu, Associate Professor of History and Women's Studies, The Ohio State University

I was the chair of the search committee that brought Susan Hartmann to OSU as the head of Women's Studies. In her we found a remarkable scholar, a splendid teacher, and a fabulous colleague. Landing Susan is one of the best things I ever did for Ohio State.

Martha Garland, Professor Emerita of History, and Vice Provost of Undergraduate Education, The Ohio State University

Susan M. Hartmann

Mentoring and Leadership Award

Words of Appreciation

Why Give?

As a path-breaking scholar of women's history; a devoted and successful teacher; a generous and supportive mentor; and a fearless advocate of fairness, justice and inclusiveness in academia and beyond, Professor Susan Hartmann has provided us with a model of excellence, integrity, compassion, and commitment to the highest ethical standards.

In her honor, The Susan M. Hartmann Mentoring and Leadership Award will be presented annually to an individual from within The Ohio State University College of the Arts and Sciences who, following in her footsteps, has demonstrated outstanding mentoring to and/or leadership on behalf of women and other historically underrepresented groups at the university. The award will be granted to an individual, irrespective of gender, rank and status, who has generously and unselfishly served others in an effort to promote equity, fairness, and equal opportunities for all members of the university community.

I am profoundly grateful and indebted to Professor Susan Hartmann, not only for her immense knowledge, but for her genuine interest in her students which has meant so much to me academically and personally over the years.

Sandy Bolzenius, graduate student, The Ohio State University

Susan Hartmann was my dissertation director and has mentored and supported me throughout my career. She is often on my mind when I am working with students, motivating me to work my hardest for them just as she did for me. Her ethics and sense of commitment on every level - to the university, the community, and of course to athletics - constantly inspire me.

Pippa Holloway, Professor of History, Middle Tennessee State University

Susan Hartmann serves as a role model for her students and colleagues on multiple levels. Most inspiring to me are her impeccable and unwavering standards of intellectual and professional integrity.

Jane Berger, Assistant Professor, Cornell University

Susan Hartmann is an exceptional mentor and role model: She is graceful and generous, rigorous and exacting, always kind and thoughtful, and deeply committed to making sure that each individual student grows intellectually and receives the best education possible. I've sought to keep her image in mind as I move through the academic world.

Stephanie Gilmore, Assistant Professor and Chair, Women's and Gender Studies Department, Dickinson College

Susan Hartmann's compassion, integrity, and passionate commitment to women's history set a standard of behavior and ethics I have tried to meet in my professional life. I think of her often in my interactions with students and colleagues.

Kathleen Laughlin, Professor of History, Metropolitan State University
